WINDHAM COUNTY DOES WELL.

Apples and Potatoes the Only Crops That Pan Out Poorly.

The Windham county farmer who has taken good care of his crops has been dealt well with this year. Conditions early in the season indicated an exceptionally good year for all crops except apples, and the harvest tells a story of hopes realized, with the exception of the potato yield. The yield of hay was much larger than that of last year. Early rains, which continued well into the season, favored an abundant growth, and in bearing it was favored with dry weather, which continued until the crop was under cover. But the same dry weather was injurious to the potato crop, which is about half that of an average year. Potatoes are small and not well matured. The price is high, potatoes selling in Brattleboro at 30 cents a bushel, retail, but fortunately the yield in Maine was heavy and the shipments now being made from that state probably will prevent the price going to an exceptional point.

Corn matured in fine shape, there being practically no soft ears in the harvest. A few fields in the lowlands, which were wet enough to start the early rains, did not get a good start, but as a rule the growth was exceptionally good. The tobacco crop, particularly in the northern part of the county, is extensive. Better prices than have been realized in the past few years are anticipated. The plants got through the season without the menace of hail or insects to any appreciable extent. As to oats, wheat and the like, but a few acres are grown in Windham county.

The yield of apples, as was expected, was small. This was due principally to late frosts. A few orchards in protected places, yielded abundantly, but as a whole the crop was a failure. Garden produce came to the harvest in fine shape. Cabbages and squashes have not been better in a long time, and all kinds of melons and vine crops are excellent.
